

B4 - The challenges of industrial and factory farming

The eating habits of the people changed abruptly with the industrialization of the different food suppliers. In every shop you can buy everything your heart desires, whether it is the food from Africa or Asia does not matter in our age, but this leads to a high pollution of the earth, but also with the food like fish. The fish eat for example micro plastic and so it comes back to the people. It comes to illness of the people and damages in the human body. Another point would be that through the greed of other people, it comes in other countries to famine because their food is taken away from other countries. This leads to poverty in some countries and fat people in others, so in these countries there is often war or violence because they say the stronger one will prevail.
