I do agree that people underestimate how hard life can be for teenagers. And also that many people don't understand their feelings and Problems. But I also think that the article is a bit superficial and typical. I also don't like when people say that the life from someone is harder than the one from others. Because in the situation you feel bad no matter how "bad" your problem is. I think the article left out harder Themes like the influence from social media, sexuality or psychologically problems.

Of course we all try to find our self and make experiences, good and bad. But that is part of growing up and makes you stronger.

Furthermore your teenage years are also the best of your life because you collect all that experience and can go crazy and be childish before you are an adult.
